HAPPY ARIZONA.

The "clean sweep" that the President made on the Federal bench of Arizona the other day was an act that should win for Mr. Cleveland the everlasting gratitude of our southern neighbors. We know comparatively little of the two late Associate Justices, except that they seem to have been the mere tools and echoes of the Chief Justice, with whom all Utah is so well acquainted. If Judge Sumner Howard is able to distinguish between right and wrong, he has learned something since he was United States District Attorney of Utah. It is one of the sad and unfortunate features of the system of filling the Federal offices in the Territories that men of Howard's instincts, capacity and ideas of rectitude and morality can and do so often get into these offices, to the annoyance and distress of the people and the disgrace of the government. It is wrongly charged to politics. Sumner Howard possessed nothing and had done nothing entitling him to the District Attorneyship of this Territory or the Chief Justiceship of Arizona, even if we go so far as to admit that the offices in the Territories belong to men in the States. He did not even enjoy the confidence and esteem of his own townsmen, and though a chronic bidder for elective office at home, was almost every time rejected by the voters who knew him. He did, however, serve politicians, who rewarded him at the expense of the people of Utah; he wasn't deemed worthy of office at home, but was thought good enough for an important position here. True or false, he has the credit of making the most of the opportunities presented by the office; certain it is, he managed to obtain full pay for any service that he may have rendered more important personages, and retired from Utah, a good deal better off in reputation, but with pockets well filled. Returning to the scene of his earlier defeats and disappointments, he re-entered the lists as an office-seeker, but the hands of those who knew him were still raised against him, and he once more turned his long eyes in the direction of Utah, which had proven so profitable a field in which to exercise his greed. Thanks to the united efforts of the local bar, the Territory was spared the infliction and affliction of Howard as Chief Justice. But our joy turned out to be Arizona's sorrow, for Howard's hold upon some politician for whom he had perhaps done some dirty work, was so powerful, that while the protest of the local bar kept the fellow out of Utah, it could not hedge him out of all the Territories, and Arizona got him. His course there has been anything but that of a learned upright judge, bent only on the enforcement of the law and administration of justice fairly and impartially. If his removal shall not be followed by scandals and charges of official wrong doing, we will admit that long practice in crookedness has enabled him to successfully cover his tracks. It is no fault of politics that the Sumner Howards get into appointive offices; it is the fault of the system which allows politicians to use the offices for rewarding their tools and strikers. Left to themselves the people could rarely be deceived and blinded so much as to put these corruptionists and tricksters into official positions.

But we congratulate Arizona on being freed from its Chief Justice, and the other Territories on the fact that they need have no fear that Howard will be saddled upon them. He has run his race, and come to the end of his official career.

THE POLITICAL organs are full of speculation now-a-days as to the future plans and movements of Mr. Blaine. This journal pretends to say what he is going to do, and that one tells what he will not do. Meantime, the people and the parties move along caring little or nothing for Mr. Blaine, and taking no thought what the gentleman proposes or what he would like. Everybody is certain that the Maine statesman will never again be the nominee for the Presidency, and this being true it matters not at all concerning his movements.

Slowly but certainly the work of British evangelization goes on among the heathen. The Indian army that is marching on to Burmah will convert King Thebaw's subjects and cause them to yield to the Christianizing influence of the cannon, the bayonet and gunpowder.

A QUEEN'S DIPLOMACY.

Good and pious Queen Victoria is a clever diplomatist as well as a thrifty monarch. A cablegram says that in the case of the rebel Riel the Queen has conferred the pardoning power on Lamsdowne, the Governor-General of Canada, and she will therefore have nothing more to do with the case. This Riel affair is a decidedly ugly business. The law demands the life of the rebel for what he has done, and wisdom suggests that the fellow should be put out of the way; while he is alive he is dangerous to peace and good order and is liable to prove troublesome to the state itself; but to execute him will in all probability prove even more annoying and dangerous. The fellow has his admirers and they have a cause that goes beyond him, whether or not it is just and right; to kill him will endear him to his followers, even as the martyrs are endeared to the Christians, and the cause for which he lost his life will become sacred, even to the extent of endangering the Queen's supremacy in a large portion of her American Dominion. Victoria's cunning comes in in placing the responsibility for Riel's taking off or pardon on other shoulders, she all the time sitting back and directing in such a way as to receive the credit should any be given, or escape the censure if affairs should take that turn. If the Queen deems it best to have Riel hanged, the hanging will take place, and upon Lord Lansdowne will fall the blame, and a commutation of the death sentence will demonstrate the kind-heartedness of the Queen and bring her discontented subjects nearer to her.

Why was Flood Rock blown up with 250,000 pounds of dynamite and rack-rock? asks a correspondent of the New York Evening Post, and then answers the seeming silly question by saying the rock was an obstruction to commerce, and therefore it was blown up. Continuing, "Yes, but so is an average duty of 45 per cent. on five hundred articles of consumption an obstruction to commerce, and why should Flood Rock be blown up and the tariff reef extending all along our coast allowed to remain? If we desire unrestricted commerce (free trade) with the outside world, we ought to blow up the protective tariff reef and allow exports and imports to go and come freely. If, on the other hand, we want as little commerce with the outside world as we can get along with, Flood Rock and all similar impediments ought to be carefully guarded from disturbance."

If a stranger, visiting Salt Lake City, thinks business is quiet here, let him come to Simon Bros. store, and he will soon be convinced to the contrary.
